Judges commented, "Great acting and connection to themes. The creativity of the map showing where the scene will take place next is a great add-on for the viewer to know the time and place of what comes next. The pacing of the video is just right. It keeps the viewer interested throughout. There are no dull moments."

Rome, Italy, on this sixteenth day of March, two thousand and twenty-three.

Italy Reads is a program that began in 2009 with The Big Read, funded by the National Endowment for the Arts and designed to restore reading to the center of American culture. John Cabot University sponsors Italy Reads to promote the reading of American literature in Italian high schools and the English language community as part of our mission to bring cultures together.
